

I believe you need to leave satellite radio alone. My husband Kelly is a truck driver and he relies on XM for traffic and weather reports all the time and especially when he out in an area where there are no stations because there are no radio towers out in the middle of no where. Truck drivers drive 10 to 11 hours a day. If you had to drive that long you would want satellite radio too. It doesn't take long to listen to your whole collection of CD's when you drive that many hours a day. My husband loves the satellite radio. I love it too. I don't have to hear my husband complain about no music and it also keeps him safer out there because of the weather reports and road reports. Truck drivers being safer out on the road is a relief to any mother, wife and child. It gives peace of mind, so please don't mess with XM radio.
